You are invited to a Cottage Community and Garden-Farm workshop at Southface on Tuesday February 7th, led by Robert Reed and Greg Ramsey, sponsored by Southface and Village Habitat Design.

Responding to the changing demographics and development patterns in smaller homes, cottage communities seek to promote neighborhoods closely tied to the local community, neighbors and organic food. Though these communities find success in other cities, cottage garden communities struggle in Georgia. Come see the few local projects presented by the designers and learn how we can promote these great communities.

The workshop is open to professional planners and developers as well as community activists and citizens interested in developing a cottage community, ecovillage or cohousing community with gardening or farming.

Please RSVP to confirm reservation.
